

Lower Seymour & Lynn Canyon Loop – March 24, 2019

We did this hike a bit different than other years and liked it much better. We started at the Rice Lake parking lot as there is more space and walked from there via the stairs down to the 30 Foot Pool to the Lynn Creek Suspension Bridge which was much quieter than it would be in the afternoon. You could tell that the snow was melting as there was lots of water coming down the creek. There were just the four of us on this grey but dry day. After crossing the suspension bridge we took the Baden Powell and the Varley Trail to the Lynn Headquarters. The views were great – lots of greenery and a rushing creek at the side of the trail. We then continued on onto the Millstream Trail and yes, there was quite a bit of snow on the trail. After a kilometer or so we went up the stairs to the upper trail where there was no snow whatsoever. From here we went to Rice Lake and found a nice little bench to have our lunch. We went around the rest of the lake and back to the parking lot.

Rimka